Conference Announcement and Call for Submissions

7th pairfam International Interdisciplinary Conference

Personality and Relationships Across the Life Span

Jena, July 2-3, 2020

We are pleased to announce the upcoming international interdisciplinary conference on “Personality and Relationships Across the Life Span”, to be held from July 2 to 3, 2020 in Jena, Germany. Save the dates and mark your calendar!

The conference is part of the scientific program of the pairfam project funded by the German Research Foundation. Pairfam is a representative panel study for analyzing close relationships and family relations in Germany. It provides large longitudinal data sets to be used by interested researchers. For more details please see www.pairfam.de/en/.

The conference will broadly focus on developmental processes in personality and close relationships. It will address dynamic transactions between personality and relationships with romantic partners, family, and friends and how these domains (co)develop across the lifespan. The program will feature a number of interesting keynote lectures by internationally renowned scientists: Chris Fraley (University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign), Jaap Denissen (Tilburg University), and Denis Gerstorf (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin).

Further contributions of interested scientists are particularly welcome. We therefore invite submissions of papers and posters presenting own research on personality and relationships across life span with pairfam data, but the conference is not restricted to contributions derived from this project. Please submit your abstract until February 15, 2020 (see below). For further information on the project and data access, please contact the pairfam user support (support@pairfam.de).

Further information on the scientific program, conference organization, and registration will be available shortly on:

Aim and Scope

During Germany's EU Council Presidency in 2020, the Institute for Employment Research (IAB) will host an interdisciplinary labor market conference. This conference will focus on labor market transitions and on the evaluation of policies that governments implement to smooth such transitions. To expand the frontiers of knowledge about the importance of the labor market for individuals' lives and the role of governments in adapting to changes in individuals' transition patterns and demographic and technological change, we are interested in papers that focus on:

- Labor market transitions of young individuals (e.g. leaving education)
- Labor market transitions of unemployed individuals
- Transitions into retirement
- Household decisions and labor market transitions (e.g. employment and parenthood)
- Technological change and labor market transitions
- Firms and labor market transitions
- Educational decision making in the school system and in the labor market (e.g. further training)
- Monetary and non-monetary consequences of labor market transitions

Submissions will preferably apply (quasi-)experimental or longitudinal designs.

Keynote Speakers

The keynote speakers of the conference are Jutta Allmendinger (WZB) and Christian Dustmann (University College London, CReAM). Furthermore, the conference will feature political keynote speakers, a panel discussion with researchers and policy makers, and about 70 paper presentations in parallel sessions.
